Not all of us were jumping up and down in excitement about going virtual but no we are not alone in this. So, we're bringing in some stimulus from the corporate world on how they have pivoted to virtual. After working and playing around in this space for the last several months, Kelsey and Katie are really inspired and truly believe virtual learning can be impactful and delightful when done well. Please join us for a live interaction & Q&A with DU Alum Kelsey from Google & Katie, CEO at HumanSide.

Katie Greenman, M.A., CEO, is an entrepreneurial social connection scientist who is driven by her passion for optimizing human potential. As a facilitator, translational researcher, experiential program designer and strategist who has co-created various initiatives and led hundreds of workshops for students, young professionals, executives and entrepreneurs from the University halls to the United Nations, Born and raised in the Florida Keys, Katie is based in the Boston area and holds a coaching certification, comedy school diploma, and bachelor and master's degree from Tufts University's Eliot-Pearson Department of Human Development where she focused on social connection and leadership effectiveness.

Kelsey Kates, Global Head of Learning Experiences and Faculty Enablement at Google, graduated from Daniels in 2006. When at DU she was nominated for Volunteer of the Year, on the DU Programs Board, was an Ambassador for incoming students and likely some other things she can no longer remember. The decade after graduating, Kelsey worked after various firms and agencies in marketing strategy and analytics roles. She joined Google in 2015 and soon found passion in the Learning and Development Field. She won the 40 under 40 Award, launching Analytical Academy at Google, to develop the best analytical thinkers. She now leads a global team bringing to life learning experiences for thousands of Googlers.

Excited to get a jump start on this? Watch Kelsey's 3 min video on The Power of Playfulness and Katie's 7 min video on How to Engage a Virtual Audience.
